SUBJECT: Kelly Yearbook

TO: All Kelly Personnel

Kelly Field's history, its attainments in war and in peace, could scarcely be covered in a book this size. In fact, the chief purpose of any annual is to record names and faces of people we are associated with today, to picture activities we shared. Such a yearbook can become a reference book of today and tomorrow, growing in value with the coming years. I am happy to add to it my personal greetings, and to join you in working toward our common goal: the upbuilding and support of a great United States Air Force, large enough and strong enough to protect our country at all times.

J. S. STOWELL
Major General, USAF
Commanding

History of Kelly Field

Kelly Field, Texas—home of the San Antonio Air Depot and center of the huge industrial hub that forms the San Antonio Air Materiel Area—occupies an important position in the history of the U. S. Air Forces.

Through two world wars, Kelly Field has contributed a major share of the tools of victory. Since 1917, Kelly Field has won distinction in many fields of endeavor. In the first world conflict the flight line at Kelly was filled with rows of "Jennies," the famous training plane of that period. From the gray-painted temporary barracks and hangars poured hundreds of pilots and mechanics, members of the new "air service" of the Signal Corps.

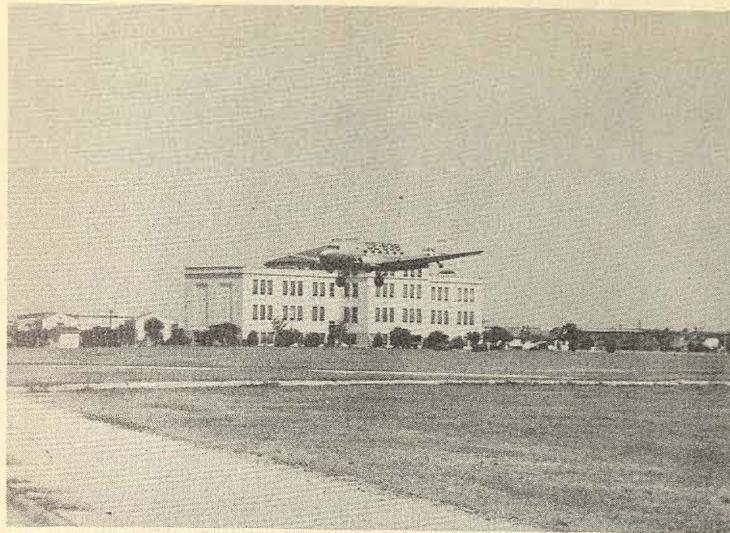

With the coming of peace in 1918, Kelly Field handled hundreds of surplus planes and equipment items—and then settled down to become the Advanced Flying School of the Air Corps. But many of Kelly's graduate pilots and mechanics of the days of the first war chose to stay at this big flying field on the outskirts of San Antonio. They, and many more, became the first employees of the San Antonio Air Depot, one of the first airplane and engine overhaul centers in the United States. Originally the Depot had been located in Dallas, but it burned in the early 1920's, and subsequently the Depot was moved to a location across the road from the present-day Kelly Field. The Depot had its own flying field and was officially listed as Duncan Field.

Through the roaring "Twenties," Kelly Field and Duncan Field did their respective jobs. Kelly's flying line saw many fledgling pilots arrive and polish their training technique at the advanced school. The names of many of those young flyers were destined to be blazoned across the headlines of the world in a few years as the gathering clouds of war settled over Europe for another time.

With the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, the engineering shops of the San Antonio Air Depot began a slow and steady expansion. Meanwhile the flight training at Kelly increased until, in 1943 the Air Force headquarters decided to merge the two fields into one, move the advanced flying operations to other areas and designate the entire installation as the San Antonio Air Depot, which was destined to play one of the greatest supply and maintenance parts in the drama of World War II.

Throughout the second world war the shops at Kelly Field turned out thousands of overhauled and modified combat and training planes. In the first month of 1943, the engineering shops established a rate of overhaul on all types of items—guns, bombsights, generators and a host of others—that stood as a record for commercial as well as government repair and manufacturing agencies. From January of '43 until the end of the war, Kelly Field maintained a consistent rate of overhauling the AAF's largest airplane engines, averaging over 1,400 engines per month.

Meanwhile, the mammoth supply warehouse handled the most comprehensive program undertaken by any Air Force depot in the Zone of Interior. Train-loads of specialized items moved through Kelly's warehouses. The speed and efficiency with which Kelly Field handled special overseas projects earned the commendation of theater commanders in every part of the world where America's Air Force chose to operate.

The big job of training thousands of soldiers as Air Force technicians was taken over by the training groups at the field. Freshly schooled soldiers were formed into Depot Groups and Service Squadrons, given a few weeks of intensive training on tactical airplanes and equipment, then rushed to overseas bases. During the early years of the war, Kelly Field civilian workers, many of them veterans of the world war of a quarter-century before, volunteered to serve at "Station X," the first American-operated maintenance and supply depot located in England. Of these 600 volunteers, nearly all are back at Kelly Field today adding their knowledge and experience to the supply and engineering problems ever occurring at the San Antonio Air Depot.

And so today—1948—finds the San Antonio Air Depot still retaining its reputation as the most famous overhaul and supply point in the U. S. Air Force. From a wartime peak of 30,000 civilian workers and 6,000 soldiers and officers, the field has returned to normal operations with a payroll of 10,000 civilians and a varying military population as organizations arrive and depart on their way to their specialized missions. Some of these missions today are the storing of planes and tools—protecting them against the time they may be called upon to again serve the nation.

The Kelly Field of today occupies 3,426 acres filled with shops, hangars, warehouses, storage areas, barracks and offices. A drive around the outside edge of the installation would measure 23 miles. The air traffic through Kelly Field from South and Central America gives it an international flavor, and the huge cargo planes of the Air Transport Command regularly stop at the field on their transcontinental runs. These planes alone account for the movement of 3,000,000 pounds of air freight each month through the supply operations at the depot.

With the advent of the new-type jet-powered fighters and bombers of the Air Force, the ever-changing requirements of supplying the needs of Air Force training and tactical missions throughout the world, the job assigned to the San Antonio Depot continues to grow in size and importance. From the clattering teletype machines in the communications branch come a ceaseless stream of special instructions from Headquarters of the Air Materiel Command at Wright Field, Ohio—more tasks and missions assigned to the Air Forces' greatest depot at Kelly Field, Texas.

HEADQUARTERS SOUTHERN SECTOR, ATC

The mission of Headquarters Southern Sector is to supervise and coordinate all Air Transport Command Activities in the Southern United States and making frequent inspection of sector headquarters setup under the jurisdiction of ATC organizational setup. The command is divided into two divisions; the stations under the present ATC is responsible for all transport services in the U.S., the North Atlantic and the Pacific. The Pacific Division is concerned with all transport routes crossing the Pacific Ocean. The Atlantic Division is further broken down into two sectors that divide the United States into two sectors were established to subordinate the command and the Pacific. This Division is further broken down into two sectors that divide the control of subordinate stations under the command of the Mason-Dixon line. Under the command of the Mason-Dixon line, the command and the Pacific. This Division is further broken down into two sectors that divide the control of subordinate stations under the command of the Mason-Dixon line. On 1 October 1946, Southern Sector was organized 2 July 1946, under the command of Colonel Kenneth C. McGregor, Sector Headquarters were moved to Kelly Field in order to provide a more central location in the command. Today Southern Sector maintains two 5 man inspection teams who travel 50,000 miles per month while inspecting the activities of Southern ATC stations.

5th AIR TRANSPORT GROUP

The 5th Air Transport Group at Kelly Field is one of the largest Air Transport Command detachments in the Southwest and is the main terminus of transport routes connecting the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. It also provides an intra-depot cargo service between Air Force installations in the south and an Air Evacuation pickup station.

The detachment was organized 10 May 1946, as the Southern terminal of the "Alamo" flight with an original complement of 48 officers and enlisted men. As the post war mission of the ATC increased, the size of the 5th Group also increased until today it numbers 338 officers and men.

Under the command of Lt. Colonel Frank Norwood, the group provides a minimum of 15 departures a week on regularly scheduled trunk lines to both coasts. In addition the 5th maintains 10 to 12 daily feeder runs in which cargo and passengers are picked up and delivered to Air Material Depots in the Southwest.

During the period the detachment has been in operation the monthly totals of cargo moved has risen from 351,855 pounds in April 1947, to 3,367,569 pounds in August 1947. At no time have the total number of assigned aircraft exceeded 19 C-54's or C-47's. The C-54's are used on the main trunk lines and the C-47's are utilized on intra-depot feeder trips.

The success or failure of any transport system falls on three departments; Operations, Traffic, and Maintenance. The Group's Operations Section is responsible for the efficient utilization of flight crews and scheduling them on trips. The 102 pilots assigned to the detachment fly an average of 60 hours per month on scheduled runs and crew training. Training is a continuous function in this department as the qualifications of a Military Air Transport pilot is one of highest in the Air Forces.

Traffic is directly concerned with the handling and shipment of cargo and passengers. It is also responsible for the training of flight clerks and warehousemen. Further, this section prepares for shipment more than 3,000,000 pounds of cargo per month.

Aircraft Maintenance performs all 25, 50 and 100 hour inspections on all assigned C-47's and C-54's; performs all Technical Order modifications and winterization, as all assigned aircraft fly into zones where winterization is required. Assigned C-54 aircraft average around 140 flying hours per month. In addition Aircraft Maintenance of this organization is required to perform first and second echelon maintenance on scheduled Air Evacuation C-54's and C-47's, passing through this operations.

The Douglas C-74 "Globemaster" is the largest cargo plane used by the Air Forces. This huge transport is capable of carrying 50,000 pounds of cargo or 142 armed soldiers, or 115 litter patients 3,000 miles. It is powered with four 3,000 horsepower engines.

Sgt. Bonnie Barron, last of the WAC flight clerks to leave Kelly Field waves goodbye as she boards an "Army Airliner."

Lt. Col. Frank Norwood, commanding officer of the 5th Air Transport Group.

Fifth Transport group C-54 receives a complete inspection before being sent out on a scheduled run to the east coast.
